above water. Such incroism challenged the admiration of their adversaries, extorted cheers from the craws of the Confederate vessels. In three quarters of an hour after the ongagement began, the Cumberland sank in fifty feet of water.

In going up James river the Merrimac had pussed and repussed the Federal land batteries at Newport News, exchanging with them a heavy fire. The James river flottila, consisting of the Confederate steamer Patrick Henry of 12 guns, Commodore J. R. Tucker, the Jamestown, Lieut, Barnoy, 2 guns, and the Teazer, Lieut, Webb, 1 gun, took advantage of this diversion to run the gauntlet of the Newport News batteries and join the Merrimac below. These vessels, together with the Beaufort and Raleigh, co operated with the Merrimac in all her subsequent movements, The Cumberland being now hors de combat, the Merrimac and her consorts turned their attention to the Congress, commanded by Lient, Joseph men began, the Camberland sank in fifty feet of water. In at tempting to keep out of the range of the Sewell's Point battery the St. Lawrence and Roanoke got aground. The Minnesota succeeded in getting within a mile and a hilf of Newport News when she, too, stuck fast in the mud. The Roanoke and St. Lawrence soon got off and returned to Fortress Monroe. The Minnesota, Capt. Van Brunt, was not so fortunate. Happily for her the Merrimac drew too much water to get nearer than a mile to her, and did not do her much damage. The Patrick Henry and Jamestown took a closer position and for a while did great execution, but the heavier guns of the Minnesota gave her the advantage. It was now nearly dark, so the Merrimae and her consorts returned to the mouth of the Elizabeth and lay off Sewall's Point.

of the Elizabeth and lay off Sewall's ARRIVAL OF THE MONITOR.

ARRIVAL OF THE MONITOR,

Such was the condition of affairs when the Monitor arrived at Old Point on the night of March 8th, While much smaller than the Merrimac, being only 127 feet long, while the Merrimac was 300 feet or over, combined some advantages which her opponent did not possess. She was equally invulnerable, her motive power was new and under much better control, she steered perfectly and drew only ten or under much better control, she steered perfectly and drew only ten or twelve feet, while the Merrimac drew twenty two feet. Her commander was Lieut. John L. Worden, an officer who had served twenty seven years in the navy. Her second in command was Lieut. S. D. Green, a young officer of 22, who had served three years in the navy. Immediately on his arrival Worden reported to Capt. Marston, the senior officer of the fleet, who orderd him at once to go up to the assistance of the Minnesota. At 11:30 p. m. Worden was alongside of that ship and remained thore until the next morning.

A FOUR HOURS' DUZI.

A FOUR HO A FOUR HOURS' BUEL. At 8 o'clock on the morning of Sun-

ing to change position, got aground, and remained so for full fifteen minutes, during which time Worden pounded her with his eleven-inch Dabigreens, and Van Brunt poured upon her all the guns he could bring to bear. But it did not phase the staunch Confederate, and getting atloat again, she rushed upon the Monitor like a big mastif who worried by the nagging of a bull terrier. This time is force the Monitor could get out of the way the Merrimac was upon her, but Worden promptly ported his helm and avoided a direct blow, receiving the impact at an angle on his starboard quarter. The wooden stern of the Monitor and was cut by its sharp iron edge, causing her to leak from the self inflicted blow. Well it was for the Monitor that the Merrimac had left her iron prow in the Cumberland the day before. Twice Worden suspended the fight, the first time to supply a deficiency of shot in his turret. The second time was for more serious cause. His station was in the pilothouse, from which he steered the ship and watched the fight through shts made in the armor for eye-holes. He was looking through one of these when a shell from the 'Merrimne struck the slit and filled his eyes with powder and particles of iron, completely disabling him. The same shot broke one of the solid iron logs of the pilot house and partially lifted its top. This injury to Wordon virtually ended the fight.
